

From Westwood to the Real Westside

[Intro: close-mic male, low bounce, grimy calm]

Westwood don't sleep, it just shifts its teeth, neon on glass, cold crawling beneath.
Bus fumes thick like a cough in the chest,
I'm sun-baked truth with a hole in the vest.
Stars overhead acting high and removed,
I'm down here grinding where nothing gets approved.
Battery dying, but the mind still lit,
making something from scraps like a stubborn-ass prick.

[Verse 1: male, heavy bounce, playful menace]

Then she saw me for real—not a glance, straight hook, silk scarf clean but her eyes read crook.
Not that fake concern, not that pity-ass scan,
she looked like she clocked the whole broke-down man.
She said, “You hungry?” I said, “Yeah, no lie—
but I ain't begging yet just to feel alive.”
She said, “Come eat.” I said, “You sure?”
She said, “I insist.” That shit hit pure.
That's class crash concrete with the night pressed thin, white wine waiting while the street walks in.

[Hook: female only, glossy bright vocal, playful snap with a hidden blade]

You saw me see you through the city glass, hungry eyes, silk scarf, trouble in class.
Different table, same damn ache,
come eat with me before we both break.

[Verse 2: male, bounce gets tighter, sharper tone]

So we walked in—me dust, her design,
two wrong notes somehow landing in time.
Host looked at me like I tracked in dirt,
she checked him quick like, “Fix that smirk.”
White linen stiff like a well-paid lie, menu talking words that don't live where I lie.
She said, “Order anything.” I said, “Say less,” but price-tag panic started punching my chest.
That silent-ass scream, that broke-man math,
add up your worth, subtract your path.

[Verse 3: male, deeper, more surgical]

She leaned in close, perfume hit grime,
two different worlds in the same damn time.
Said, “My world feels rehearsed.” I said, “Mine feels cursed.”
She said, “Never fought for my plate.” I said, “That shit hurts.”
She said, “I'd trade it.” I said, “Careful with that, some cages got velvet stitched in the trap.”

Then it cracked—clean split down the mask,
“I don’t know who I am without all this class.”
That line sat heavy, no rhythm, no game—truth don’t knock, it kicks in your brain.

[Hook: female only, brighter, tighter, confident edge]
White linen lied but your eyes told truth,
I got gold on my skin and a hole in the roof.
Take me past the glow, past the fake,
I wanna know what’s real when the masks all break.

[Outro: male, stripped, grounded]
I said, “You wanna see real? Step past that glow.”
She blinked twice, then smiled like, “Let’s go.”
We left the linen, left the light, left that fake-ass version of the night.
Past polished, perfume, pretend, and prayers—
to blue tarp cathedrals and duct-tape stairs.
She didn’t flinch when the real got near.
I said, “Relax... she’s learning what real means here.”
We sat on a crate, cracked laptop alive,
battery borrowed just to keep shit alive.
She asked what I do. I said, “Build outta scraps.”
She said, “Like what?”
I said, “Stories. And tracks.”

SAME DAMN ACHE — PART 2: THE SOUND

[Intro: close-mic male, low bounce, ambient tarp + footsteps]
Past the polished, past the pose, past the part where the fake shit glows.
Blue tarp cathedrals, duct-tape grace,
city got a second, truer face.
Wind through plastic like a lung half-torn,
night shift breathing where the pretty gets worn.
She stepped in clean but she ain’t recoil,
heels in the dust, silk flirting with soil.

[Beat: half-second pause]
She stayed.

[Narration: male, impressed, grounded bounce]
That told me more than a thousand looks—some people read, some people get read like books.

[Verse 1: male, teaching tone, rhythmic bounce]

Crate for a throne, laptop flicker alive,
battery borrowed just to keep shit alive.
Fan wheeze thin like it begging for breath,
screen blinking low like a countdown to death.

Pulled up a beat—bare bones, no gloss,
kick hit heavy like it charging a cost.
Snare snapped dry like a lie getting named,
no polish, no cover, no industry game.

I said, “Listen—don’t chase how it sound,
chase what hurt when nobody around.
Catch that feeling before it get slick, pin that motherfucker—make it stick.”

[Hook: female only, bright, melodic, curious but edged]
Show me how the truth fit in a beat,
how the pain line up when the drums repeat.
If I say it wrong, don’t let it break—teach me how to say what I can’t fake.

[Verse 2: male, instructional, bounce tighter, surgical clarity]
“Start where it sit—chest, throat, spine, don’t dress it up, don’t clean the line.
Count with the kick—just nod your head,
let the rhythm carry what you ain’t said.

Don’t overthink it, don’t try to impress,
truth hit harder when it half-dressed.
Pretty sound cute but it don’t last long,
real stay ugly and still hit strong.”

She said, “I don’t know where to start.”
I said, “Start where it tore you apart.”

[Verse 3: male observing her, bounce steady, building]
Then it cracked—quiet first, then loud, pretty-girl voice cut through the crowd.
She said it soft, then said it raw,
like she finally saw what she never saw.

Words came shaky, then locked in tight,
like she swung one time and learned how to fight.
Camp leaned in, whole air got still,
like the truth found shape, like it learned to feel.

No stage, no brand, no curated sound,
just a cracked little moment pulling people around.

[Hook: female only, stronger, more confident, still polished edge]
I hear it now when the silence breaks,
how the real don't bend, how the fake just shakes.
Different world but the same damn ache,
I don't wanna shine—I wanna create.

[Bridge: male, low, affirming, bounce stripped back]
I said, "There it is—don't clean that scar, that's the part that tell 'em who you are.
Let it sit wrong, let it hit off-beat,
perfection don't move—truth got feet."

[Verse 4: male, final teaching, grounded authority]
"Anybody can copy what polished do, few got the nerve to bleed it through.
This ain't talent—it's what you face,
what you don't run from, what you don't erase.

You felt that shift? That's your lane,
that's your voice cutting through the frame.
Don't lose that trying to sound 'right'— wrong said honest hit harder than hype."

[Hook: female only, fully formed, confident, cutting clarity]
Say it clean or say it rough,
either way it gotta be real enough.
I found my voice in a cracked-up place,
same damn truth, same damn ache.

[Outro: close-mic male, ambient fades in]

She looked at me—no filter, no role,
said, “That felt like I found my soul.”
I shrugged, lit smoke, let silence sit,
said, “Yeah... that’s the sound of not faking shit.”

Wind moved through tarp like a breath through a lung,
city kept chewing like it never done.
No rich, no poor, no mask, no crown—
just two real voices figuring it out.