

Love and wifey are not the same motherfucking thing.

So if I come on strong, do not get the shit twisted from the start.

Yeah, I write songs. Yeah, I make art. Yeah, I might take a moment, a look, a night, or one little detail about you and turn it into something raw, personal, and hard to ignore.

But do not mistake that for a crown.

That does not mean you are suddenly my forever. That does not mean I am claiming you. That does not mean I am building a wife out of chemistry, closeness, and a few nights that hit different.

It means this.

I respect moments that feel real.

If me and you are sharing space, sharing energy, waking up in the same bed, moving through the day together, laughing, fucking, talking, and just existing side by side in a world that stays ugly as hell, then yeah, that means something to me.

Not everything. But not nothing either.

Your presence can matter without me acting like you fell from the sky to save my life. I can appreciate you without worshipping you. I can feel you without making you the center of my whole damn universe.

That is grown-folk math.

I am not one of these numb-ass men moving like showing feeling makes them weak. When something feels real, I lean in. I pay attention. I create. I show up. I make a woman feel seen.

That is not me being confused. That is me being real.

And yeah, dark days got something to do with that too.

I know what heavy feels like. I know what it is when life goes gray and the air feels mean. So when I catch a moment that feels good, honest, warm, or just less full of bullshit, I value it.

I would much rather be painting happy clouds than fuck-you clouds.

So if I pour into a moment with you, do not take that as me saying you are some magical shining star. And do not take it as me saying you mean nothing either.

It just means your presence hit. It mattered. It gave the day a little color.

That is enough to respect without turning it into a fairytale.

Hear this part extra clear.

Intensity is not ownership. Passion is not a proposal. Chemistry is not commitment. And good dick damn sure is not a blood oath.

I can be passionate without being possessed. Attentive without putting you in chains. Deep without being desperate. Present without making promises I have not earned the right to make.

That is where people get this shit backwards. They see a man show real energy, real attention, real expression, and think that means they just skipped ten chapters ahead.

No.

Wifey shit is different. That shit takes time. That shit takes truth. That shit takes pressure. That shit takes seeing how we fit when life gets ugly, broke, tired, irritated, inconvenient, and real as a motherfucker.

Anybody can feel like destiny when the sex is right and the vibe is humming. Lust has a glow. Chemistry has a soundtrack. Fantasy has great fucking lighting.

Real commitment gets tested when the lights come on.

So enjoy the songs. Enjoy the art. Enjoy the attention. Enjoy the way I can make a moment feel like something.

Just do not build a whole fake-ass future out of it.

Because if it flows, I flow. If it is forced, I am gone.

No fake promises. No confused titles. No playing house in a shaky-ass structure built out of lust, loneliness, and projection.

If it fits, it fits. If it does not, deuces.

So understand me right from the start.

When I create around you, that does not mean you are nothing. And it does not mean you are everything.

It means you mattered in that moment. It means I felt that. It means I honored it.

But commitment is a whole different motherfucking table.