

Water and Concrete

[Intro: Deep male voice. Spoken over distant rain, sparse piano, and a heartbeat-like kick.]

They told us hard survive...

They never told us soft outlives.

This one...

For everybody still building...

With bloody hands.

[Verse 1: Calm, confident delivery with internal rhyme and conversational swagger.]

Tuesday, two in the morn', liquor store glow,

Cracked-up pavement where the lost souls roam.

She leaned on a Buick that wasn't her ride,

Cigarette hanging like she stared death in the eye.

She smirked, "You looking for trouble?"

"Nah... just peace."

Watching smoke let the night wind do as it please.

She laughed, "Philosophy? Around here? That's rich."

I said, "Truth don't move just 'cause neighborhoods switch."

She wore pain like gold that couldn't get pawned,

Smile saying, "I've survived every damn wrong."

I ain't spit game, I ain't flex, I ain't front,

Real recognize real... that's usually enough.

[Hook: Female vocal. Bold, unforgettable, anthemic.]

Water and concrete...

Baby, that's you and me.

Still stand tall...

When the whole block bleeds.

Water and concrete...

We grow where they can't see.

They built these walls...

We became the streets.

[Verse 2: Grittier flow with layered rhymes.]

She buried blood...

I buried years...

Judge dropped numbers...

Life dropped tears.

Both of us learned love come overpriced,

Every little blessing got a heavy-ass price.

Traffic outside sounded just like waves,

City full of people digging invisible graves.

She whispered low,

"You ever fear me?"

I said,

"I fear anything that can disappear from me."

Silence hugged louder than words could speak,

Two broke souls finally sleeping all week.

No fairy tales...
No Hollywood scene...
Just cracked-up hearts chasing one clean dream.

[Hook: Female vocal with stacked harmonies.]

Water and concrete...
Baby, that's you and me.
Still stand tall...
When the whole block bleeds.
Water and concrete...
We grow where they can't see.
They built these walls...
We became the streets.

[Verse 3A: Controlled intensity. Calm confidence. Every line feels deliberate.]

Rent came first...
Pride came second...
Arguments stacked like overdue questions.
She disappeared...
Three long nights...
I watched dawn drag itself through busted streetlights.
Every hour tried selling me rage,
Every memory begged me to storm the stage.
But a loud-ass ego always bills you twice...
I wasn't buying that price.

[Inner Monologue: Spoken softly but with quiet masculine swagger. Beat strips down to bass and piano.]

Three days...
A younger me would've wrecked the room.
Blew up her phone.
Fed my pride like it paid the rent.
Nah...
Strength ain't who can bark the loudest.
Strength is who can sit still...
While every demon in his chest screams,
"Crash out."
Any fool can lose control.
A grown man decides where his hands...
His mouth...
And his heart go.
I don't chase.
I don't beg.
I don't threaten.
If she walks...
That's her choice.
If she comes back...
She better find the same man she left.
Not some broken-ass echo trying to prove he's hard.
Stone flexes...

Water survives.

[Verse 3B: Beat returns. Confident, grounded delivery.]

Door cracked open...

She stepped inside...

Guilt hanging heavy, nowhere to hide.

She waited on thunder...

Expected flame...

Expected me playing that old damn game.

Instead...

Coffee...

Two old mugs...

Some fights lose power when nobody shoves.

She frowned...

"That's it?"

I slid one across.

"You're home.

That already cuts through half the loss."

Silence settled...

Truth sat down...

No kings get crowned by burning their town.

Water don't scream...

Water don't boast...

Still shapes mountains...

Drop by drop...

That's growth.

[Bridge: Voices intertwine naturally.]

Hold me...

Don't own me...

Choose me...

Don't control me...

If love gotta breathe...

Then let it breathe...

That's how roots reach places...

Eyes can't see.

[Final Hook: Huge female anthem with male harmony underneath.]

Water and concrete...

Baby, that's you and me.

Still stand tall...

When the whole block bleeds.

Water and concrete...

We grow where they can't see.

Every scar...

Every dream...

Every cracked-up memory...

Water and concrete...

That's all we'll ever need.

[Outro: Deep spoken word.]

Everybody wanna be the hardest...

Till hard shatters.

Water never brags...

It just keeps showing up...

Until the concrete forgets...

It was ever stronger.
